FOURTEEN

(Copyright, 1920,) What is a cultured man? Most of us admit that we are little naughty, but no one admits that he is vulgar.

I have just had dealings with a prize human boor (that is, he looked human, had a face and hands), and i set me thinking of what a cultured man ought not to be. And I met a cultured man once, which gave me an idea of what one ought to be.

So here goes.
(1) A cultured man tries to make everybody happy. A boor delights to hurt your feelings. (2) The most striking thing about a cultured man is that he is disci-plined. Some well bred people lose control of themselves at times; all vulgar people do.
(3) A cultured man has no petulance.

He becomes angry, but not incoherent.

(4) Passion, in a cultured man, teens the thought. In the vulgar man keens the thought. In the vulgar man feeling always means confusion.

(5) It is the instinctive desire to please, which, in a cultured man, leads him to dress so as to pass unnoticed, to avoid anything of loudness in speech, manner or appearance to be polite and self-effacing. (6) Culture never bluffs, never to culture never binns, never boasts, never threatens. The deed is as eloquent as the manner is simple.

(7) The cultured man may be swift and deft, but he never is in a hurry.

(8) He may accomplish much, but always with a suggestion of leisure, with the air of poise, never with the bluster of heing very busy. with the air of poise, never with the bluster of being very busy.

(3) Culture excludes intolerance. The sign of a sound education is a certain hospitality of mind.

(10) The cultured man easily adapts himself to the company he is in. Being buman, he finds the human common denominator with any one. There are two spirits in which one may be "all things to all men," one, that of cunning, hypocrisy and fawning, which is vulgar enough; the other that of quick sympathy, clear understanding, and an inborn love of folks, which makes such catholicity of culture as we see in Lincoln or Burns.

(11) Foppishness, display, affected speech, superciliousness, condescension, haughtiness, airs of exclusiveness, and all such things are bits of egotism, emanations of ignorance, and shout out a vulgar soul. So that, perhaps, the vulgarest person in an abbluster of being very busy.

rolled in Sunday school, nor are they receiving any religious training." As one has well said: "Spiritual illiteracy is the forerunner of moral bankruptcy and national decay." The largest field for labor offering the greatest and best returns for our endeavors is among the children. The future of our country civilization and Chrisour country, civilization and Chris tianity depends upon our accepting Christ's attitude toward the little ones and attempting to not only win them, but protect them for the glory sented by the fact that "over twenty-seven million children, and young people under twenty-five years of age, in the United States, are not en-ones and attempting to not only will them, but protect them for the glory of the Lord Jesus.

The development in the life of the child of a character like the Master's was His ideal. Environment, education and experience molds to a large extent the character of every person. Jesus pointed out that it would not be profitable for the one whose word led a child astray. The one who takes advantage of them or causes the immature to stumble He warned with those terrible words which pointed out that it would be "profitable for him that a great millstone (Mg. "Gr., a millstone turned by an ass") should be hung about his neck, and that he should be sunk in the depths of the sea. Christ by those words condemned any system that injures the child life, just as much as He did the quarreling of His disciples in front of the child for personal prestige, position and power. He placed His disapproval upon child labor that is thrice cursed. It curses the employer, who deadens his conscience so that he can obtain a profit by exploitation of the helpless. It is a curse to the thousands of unemployed, who are cast aside to make room for the cheap and immature help. It places its greatest curse upon the child, whose character and body are impaired by the burden of toil. Jesus warned His disciples that it would be better for them to enter life mutilated than to face the punishment of an eternal unavailing remorse because of neglecting to place child.

The position that the child holds in the sight of God ought to keep us from despising the little ones. He guards them with angels who always behold the Father's face in heaven. Our vision of God will be revealed by our attitude toward the immature life of the world. God does not desire that one of them shall perish. His love for the child is seen in His use of the shepherd's care for the lost, which was a favorite illustration with the Master when He desired
